Students also had the opportunity to observe live demonstrations of key organic inputs such as Vermicompost, Vermiwash, and Biofertilizers, providing them with valuable hands-on learning experiences. The primary objective of the visit was to deepen students' understanding of organic agriculture and inspire them to adopt sustainable and eco-friendly farming practices. Additionally, the visit aimed to cultivate innovation and entrepreneurial thinking among aspiring agriculturists. The visit was conducted under the guidance of Prof. Bhawna Thakur (Head of Department). Prof. Gurpreet Singh accompanied the students, ensuring an interactive and educational experience throughout the day. Dr. Jasvir Singh (Principal) also addressed the students, encouraging regular participation in such field visits. He, along with the faculty, emphasized the importance of experiential learning in strengthening practical knowledge and nurturing an entrepreneurial mindset. Approximately 40 students took part in this enriching educational tour, which not only expanded their academic perspectives but also served as a strong motivation to embrace organic and sustainable farming practices.
